TEACHING VALUES ACROSS THE CURRICULUM

An educational system isn't worth a great deal if it teaches young people how to make a living but doesn't teach them how to make a life.

The 2005 Australian National Framework acknowledges that schools must be concerned with more than educating students in terms of 'outcomes' to fill their place in society, to get a good job and to be economically successful. The education curriculum has a wider remit of educating young people to fulfil their potential.

Values Education is a compulsory component of the 2005 Australian National Framework.

- What does Values Education mean in your school?
- How have you explicitly incorporated values learning & practice into your lesson content?
- What training in Values Education do you provide your teachers?
- How do you review Values Education outcomes?

SCOPE OF TEACHING VALUES SEMINAR:

- The Social Challenges of Gen Y - What are we up against?
- Contemporary Values Education: the Australian Framework & International trends
- How Values Education can be integrated into all subject areas
- Making it work in the Years 6-10 classroom - trialed and tested subject material and innovative cross-curricular methodologies

Develop practical strategies for integrating values across the curriculum in a rigorous and relevant way

Receive a DVD with comprehensive teaching resources, including a full unit on The Environment

TEACHING
PRAISE FOR
(2008 NZ SEMINARS)

I'll take what I have learnt and integrate into the other curriculum subjects I teach. I love the practical strategies you have shared with us. Your presentation was very engaging. Your deep understanding of the importance of values in schools, and your passion is evident.

Barbara Stepanic, Marist College, Auckland

It certainly addressed an issue that I have been thinking about a lot: how to bring more of the special character of my school into my Geography lessons. Brilliant suggestions of how to practically introduce values education in our lessons.

Cornelius Bootsman, Auckland

Opened my eyes to the links in other subjects. Has given me a lot of ideas for future directions in my department teaching.

Alistair Campbell, HOD Humanities, Rathkeale College

Stimulating, informative, enjoyable. Lots of ideas generously shared!

Sheridan Watt, Dean Year 8, St Cuthbert's College

Very enlightening. Great to get given ready-made resources as well as a range of ideas for activities. The mix of trainer talk versus practical work was just right. Deb and Catherine very positive and enthusiastic.
